It's tough at the top, and once you get there, staying there means developing a leadership footprint, a way of thinking, communicating and doing that takes YOUR people forward at the speed of change. The new ecosystem is a trajectory of change, challenges, hyper-competition and opportunities that have become the NEW normal and will only continue to grow. There are many reasons why the focus of my work is the optimization of human potential and results in disruptive times. My passion for 3Q Leadership™ is the fire that lights my day, my work and my commitment to helping those who lead, and those who aspire to greater leadership succeed.

What happens when a toxic leader is in charge? What happens when those who lead are unable to adjust to the new reality; the new workplace where controlling the model of production, managing and directing people like cogs in a wheel is a recipe for failure. Toxic leaders poison the environment, the pollute the ability of even the best and brightest managers and employees to really excel and contribute.

The only way to solve a problem is to recognize it.

- Do you know a toxic leader?
- Do you work for a toxic leader?

- Is it time to help someone who struggles with a leadership style that can and will sink the whole ship get the coaching he needs to shift forward, learn and lead forward?

How do some CEOs set themselves and their companies up for failure?

6 Types Of Toxic CEOs That You Don't Want To Be

The Gambler

The gambler CEO is someone who takes on a lot of risk and is willing to bet big on a single idea or strategy. They are often charismatic and confident, but they can also be reckless and impulsive. They may have a lot of followers, but they can also lose everything if their bet fails.

The Hesitator

The hesitator CEO is someone who is always second-guessing themselves and their decisions. They are often indecisive and lack confidence, which can lead to missed opportunities and a lack of direction for the company. They may be a good listener, but they can also be a poor leader.

The Loudmouth

The loudmouth CEO is someone who is always talking and never listening. They are often arrogant and self-centered, and they can be very disruptive to the company. They may have a lot of ideas, but they can also be a poor listener and a poor leader.

The Cowboy

The cowboy CEO is someone who is always on the edge and is willing to take on a lot of risk. They are often charismatic and confident, but they can also be reckless and impulsive. They may have a lot of followers, but they can also lose everything if their bet fails.

The Despot

The despot CEO is someone who is always in control and is willing to use whatever means necessary to get their way. They are often authoritarian and can be very intimidating. They may have a lot of power, but they can also be a poor leader and a poor listener.

The Maverick

The maverick CEO is someone who is always doing things their own way and is not afraid to challenge the status quo. They are often innovative and creative, but they can also be rebellious and difficult to work with. They may have a lot of ideas, but they can also be a poor listener and a poor leader.

TO SUM IT UP:

CEOs are a complex mix of strengths and weaknesses. While some CEOs are successful, others are not. The key to success as a CEO is to be self-aware and to understand your own strengths and weaknesses. It is also important to be a good listener and to be a good leader. Finally, it is important to be a good person. CEOs who are good people are more likely to be successful than those who are not.

The imperative to light a fire, to kindle engagement, collaboration, innovation must be the mandate of every organization and business that wants to survive and thrive. There is no room, no place for leadership toxicity in an organization that wants to lead and succeed forward. Great business is all about people. Controlling the mode of production, organizing people to take their place as cogs in a standardized wheel with rigid protocols that impede their ability to think, collaborate, innovate and contribute is the path to decline and death. Toxic leaders who push their employees and managers into silent submission will be left with a perfect storm that will erode the people, the potential that is the only hope for a business sustainability and growth. Is it there hope for toxic leaders? Yes, if they have the desire to make a critical shift forward. Helping leaders make the behavioral and communication changes that optimize their potential and the potential of others is one of the most critical benefits of excellent executive coaching.
