

5 Virtual Team-Building Tactics for Your Business

Team building activities can be tough when everything is conducted virtually. Being able to be in the same room with someone can help you learn a lot about them and get to know them. However, it has been tough recently due to everything being conducted online. If you are trying to bond with your team online, then here are some activities you can do to build your team.

1. Online Trivia

Online trivia is a great way to get to know your teammates better, and it allows you to spend some quality time with them. Typically, you could go to a bar/restaurant and have a trivia night with your team. However, the pandemic has made that hard to do now. This is an alternative that you can do online to get to know your teammates better.

You may find out that one of your teammates has a lot of knowledge about a topic that you love, which can give you two something to talk about in the future. Also, you may be able to ask that person to teach you about that subject, which can lead to a stronger bond within your team.

2. Pub Crawl

A virtual pub crawl could be something fun to do with your team. A traditional pub crawl is where you and a bunch of people go to a bunch of different bars and have a drink. However, the pandemic has made it hard to do that. When doing a virtual pub crawl you can look at different websites and have a drink while talking about a bunch of cool stuff.

Of course, you need to make sure this is ok with your team and that everyone is legally allowed to drink. You may find that someone really loves a particular drink, and your teammates might open your eyes to a drink that you have never tried before.

3. Team Gaming

Gaming is something that has been done online for years prior to the pandemic. Gaming can be a great way for people to bond and learn more about each other. You may find that your teammates are good at a particular game, or that they know a lot about a specific game.

Gaming will give you time to talk with your teammates and have casual conversations. Gaming can go for hours, which can allow you and your teammates to talk about a handful of topics.

4. Escape Room

An escape room is like the idea of gaming with your teammates. Normally, an escape room is where you and a group of people are trapped in a room, and you must use clues around the room to get out of it. This can be done virtually. While you may not get the rush of being stuck in a room, it can still be fun to do with your teammates.

This will also give you an opportunity to problem solve alongside your teammates, which can be vital to a team's success. Communication is important for a team to succeed. This can also show you who on your team may be good at puzzles, math, or any of the other things that are involved with the given escape room.

5. Two Truths and A Lie

If you have run out of other virtual team-building tactics, then you can always resort to two truths and a lie. You can set up a specific meeting for this to help your team get to know one another, or you can build it into the end of your meetings casually.

Two truths and a lie will help you learn cool facts about your teammates that you would not have already known. You play the game by sharing two truths about yourself with your teammates, and you also share a lie about yourself with them. Then, it is their job to figure out which one of the statements you made is a lie.

Conclusion

You may not have to do all of these things to build your team, but all of these can be fun to do with your team. If there is one activity that your team loves, then you should continue to do that. Also, there are other activities out there to do, so you should look for an activity that best fits everyone on your team.

Stephanie Caroline Snyder graduated from The University of Florida in 2018; she majored in Communications with a minor in mass media. Currently, she is an Author and a Freelance Internet Writer, and a Blogger.